Fundamentally, a case study is an in-depth study of a particular situation rather than a sweeping statistical survey. It is a procedure used to narrow down a very broad field of research into one facilely researchable topic.

While planning about your case study, the writing part is difficult. Plan properly how you are going to present your case study. Here are some steps, if you follow them while writing your case study assignment it becomes easy for you to write the entire case study

A) Determine which case study type is suitable to your proposed audience

Chose the appropriate audience that goes well with your case study topic. Examine your facts and draft them under the appropriate case study category, and whatever the case you are working on you should thoroughly analyze the situation which could reveal facts or information.

B) Determine the topic of your study

Choose your topic- opt what angle are you going to view it from and what perspective you are going to take it forward with - determines the topic of your study. Afterwards, determine where your research will take place.

C) Search for the case studies that was published earlier on the same topic

When researching your subject makes sure you search for articles and journals that contain information and facts about the same topic that was published previously. Old files will get you sources or might click something that you won't find it in the latest development of your subject matter.

D) Select participants that you will need to include in your case study

Sources provide the best information. Find knowledgeable people to interview. They don't necessarily have to be on site, they can be active in the past or directly involved. Decide whether your interviewee is going to be an individual or a group.

E) Collect and analyze all applicable data

This includes documents, observations, and artifacts. Organize everything in one place so that you don't have a problem in accessing them while working on your case study. You can't include all, so sort out -what will be applicable and can be considered to be part of your case study and arrange it in the situation at the case site -will be understandable to your records.

F) Develop and write your case by using the collected data throughout groundwork

Include four sections in your case study: Introduction, background information explaining, why you created the case and at the end conclusion.

G) Add references or appendices

Add References to your sources. If you have any information that you did not include because it would spoil the flow include it now. You may have information or term that is hard for the other culture to understand then include it in the appendix or note for the instructor.

H) Edit and proofreading

Now that your paper is formulated read 4-5 times and correct the grammatical errors. Keep an eye on the flow and transition. Have someone else proofread because your mind might become unaware of the mistakes that it has seen a lot of times. Give it to someone else because another set of eyes might point out errors that you weren't able to. They might point out if the content has been left-handed open or otherwise confusing.

These are some steps that if you follow it will become easier for you to write down your case study without much hassle.
